Inwardness and Existence: Subjectivity in/and Hegel ...

"Subjectivity is, first of all, inwardness and passion." It is a commitment, not a mere discovery or "correctness." Subjectivity is the realm where we find that very special sense of existence from which "existentialism" will eventually get its name. It is living fully, which may not be outwardly evident.

Becoming a self in this way is called existence, inwardness, and subjectivity. This use of existence as a technical term for the finite, human self that is always in the process of becoming can be seen as the birth of existentialism. Many scholars accordingly refer to Kierkegaard as the father of that movement. The two modes of subjectivity are ...
